

Dear Hiring Manager,

I am writing to express my interest in teaching English in Korea. I hold a degree in Communication Studies from San Jose State University, where I graduated with a GPA of 3.687. Throughout my academic and personal journey, I have consistently sought creative outlets—such as music, theater, and sports—which have helped me develop a strong set of skills in leadership, critical thinking, teamwork, creative writing, and oral communication.

My background in communication studies aligns naturally with the demands of teaching English. I have spent a great deal of time writing essays and delivering presentations, and I believe that helping students learn how to express themselves confidently and clearly is one of the most valuable aspects of language education.

During my time at university, I focused on courses such as marketing, public relations, and mediation—subjects that all center around understanding people and effectively conveying ideas. These experiences gave me insight into resolving conflicts, understanding diverse perspectives, and maintaining engagement—skills that are essential in the classroom.

Additionally, I've created various forms of creative content, such as a music video for my high school that highlights my abilities in creative writing, storytelling, and public speaking. In today's media-rich world, I believe creative content plays a key role in language learning. A creative approach not only enhances understanding but also fosters a fun, encouraging atmosphere that inspires students to express themselves and think outside the box.

I am enthusiastic about the opportunity to bring my skills and passion to the classroom, and I look forward to helping students develop both language proficiency and the confidence to use it.

Thank you for considering my application. I look forward to the possibility of speaking with you further.

Sincerely,

6341
