To whom it may concern,

I have known teaching is a great passion of mine ever since I was young. I graduated with a BA in Art Education from Palm Beach Atlantic University in December of 2016 and have had many years of teaching experience since then.

After substitute teaching in the States until the end of 2017, I moved to Seoul, Korea to teach elementary and middle school students at E-Spirit from 2018-2019. While teaching younger children has its own benefits, I wanted a chance to teach young adults as there is so much possibility for critical thinking and growth. That is when I moved to China to be an English Professor at Sanda University from 2019-2020. I loved the work and students there, and was offered a promotion as head teacher in their Shanghai branch at the end of my first year's contract, but felt drawn to go back to Korea.

From March 2020-December 2021, I taught formal essay writing, grammar, oral presentations, and literature analysis at the Elite Language Center for TAMUC in Seoul. This was a wonderful program that gave students a second chance at doing what they really wanted to do by studying abroad in the States. Some of these students had a hard time with school up to that point, and our program specialized in giving them a Western learning experience that allowed them to have a fresh start at education. That is my main passion. To give students the support and tools they need to grow and succeed.

I believe good classroom management includes a safe learning environment, patient support from the teacher, cooperative work with peers, and feeling comfortable enough to understand that asking for help and clarification is not a sign of failure, but a sign of effort in learning. Each student has a unique way they succeed in learning. If nurtured and taught to their individual strengths, any student can grow not only intellectually, but emotionally, which I believe is an important aspect of learning English. I also believe the culture of South Korea is so rich. There will always be a part of me in South Korea, and I am eager to get back.

As an Education graduation and a previous teacher, I have a great appreciation for those learning English and feel I have gained great experience in my previous teaching jobs to help in that journey. I would love the opportunity to teach in South Korea again.

Thank you for your time,

Rachel Bailey
