Good day

I am writing to apply for an English teaching position at your institution. I hold a double major in Media Studies and Organisational Psychology from the University of the Witwatersrand, and I have been based in South Korea for the past seven years — first as an ESL teacher, and more recently working across entertainment, content creation, and voice performance. I am now looking to return to the classroom, and I am bringing considerably more to it than when I first started.

My original teaching experience covered students aged 5 to 15 across classroom and camp environments. I taught conversational English, reading, writing, grammar, and comprehension, facilitated student debates, and served as lead teacher for various programmes. Throughout my years in entertainment, I never fully stepped away from education — I have maintained a consistent private tutoring practice, working one-on-one with students from young children to adults on ESL, book analysis, and reading comprehension. Teaching has always been part of what I do.

What the entertainment years added is harder to put on a CV but easy to feel in a classroom. Working as an MC, voice artist, and live performer has made me sharper at reading a room, holding attention, and adapting in real time — skills that matter enormously when you are trying to keep a group of ten-year-olds engaged or draw a quieter student into a conversation. I am comfortable in front of people of all ages and backgrounds, and I know how to make language feel like something worth engaging with rather than something to get through. I am a native English speaker who also speaks Xhosa fluently and Korean at an intermediate level. Having spent seven years living and working within Korean culture, I understand the specific challenges Korean learners face with English — and I know how to meet them where they are without losing the pace or energy of a good lesson.

I am open to hagwon, public school, and international school environments and am happy to discuss availability, curriculum requirements, or any additional information you may need. I can provide references from previous teaching roles on request.

Thank you for your time. I look forward to the possibility of working with your team.

Warm regards,

Vuyolwethu Gaga
