Dear Sir or Madam,

This is a recommendation letter for [redacted] in support of her professional applications. [redacted] completed her Bachelor of Arts degree in Journalism from the University of Roehampton in 2024, receiving a first-class honours degree.

I taught [redacted] in multiple classes over the course of her time at the university. She was an outstanding student. She is dedicated, intelligent, talented and creative. She also possesses clear leadership skills.

In her final year, [redacted] led a team of fellow international students in the development and launch of an original magazine called Rooted, a publication that focused on herbal products and medicine. This was for a class I taught in magazine journalism and production, which involved coming up with an idea for a new magazine and seeing it through to launch. [redacted] was both the inspiration and the driving force behind Rooted; she worked with her colleagues to develop an editorial vision and a professional standard print publication.

This class involved presenting her finished product to a panel of professional journalists, which included one of Britain's most respected magazine editors. The launch of Rooted magazine was a big success, due in no small part to [redacted]'s efforts to foster a collaborative, positive environment for her team. She received extensive praise from the panel for her originality, professionalism, and high-quality journalism.

[redacted] was among the most engaged students I have taught over the years, always keen to ensure her work was as good as it could be. I have no hesitation in recommending her.

Yours sincerely,

Dr Adam Cox
Senior Lecturer, Journalism
